This week once again featured solid action throughout. Though many of the bigger stadium names weren't in action, as always there were some ranked top ten fighters on hand.

The stoppages began to come later in the week. Last week saw some really nice, highlight reel elbow stoppages. This past week, most of the stoppages came by way of punches. In particular, Pitchichai's second knockdown of Silaphet was a combination of great evasion and quickness. He saw the left hook coming all the way, swiftly evaded it and came right back with a lethal straight right.

I was surprised that Sarawut lost, in his return fight after losing his Lumpini title to Sam-D in December. Yothin just seemed stronger at the weight.

All in all, it was another week filled with good fights and next week will of course be more of the same. Maybe next week will be filled with knee or kick knockouts, following the pattern of elbows and then punches.
