Written by Dave Walsh Wednesday, 26 June 2013 00:06 -

For Badr Hari the nightmare of his legal problems has still yet to really end. While Hari might be a free man for the time being, there is still an upcoming trial that looms ahead for him in the brutal beating of Koen Everink. Everink was beaten within an inch of his life, with a plate in his head now and limited use of his ankle, which was damaged so severely in a night club attack, which he has pointed out Badr Hari as his attacker.

Hari served some prison time already in the case, but was let out on bail earlier this year, which allowed for him to return to the ring where he has competed twice this year so far. According to De Telegraaf

Hari is due back in court starting on October 10th where his fate will be decided once and for all.