Muay Thai Weekly Recap: March 10

This week was action packed, culminating in the huge show on Friday. Not only did the show on Friday live up to its expectations and more, it was one of the best shows top to bottom that I've seen. Featuring a who's who of Muay Thai, there wasn't a bad fight on Friday.

Singdam defeated Sagetdao in the main event in a great strategical battle, with Sagetdao trying to close distance and clinch while Singdam did what he does and fired off hard right round kick after hard right round kick. Sagetdao was out of gas later on when Singdam fully took over.

For me, my favorite fight was Mondam vs. Chokprecha. Chokprecha came out guns blazing and managed to land some big shots on Mondam, with elbows, punches and low kicks. Mondam hung with him the whole time and a recurring theme in the fight was his right cross. In the third round Mondam landed a picture perfect right cross to seal the deal.

A few other stoppages happened on the card, so we'll start with Thongchai vs. Damien Alamos. Thongchai came out from the opening bell and seemed to have the mindset that Alamos had nothing for him. Thongchai destroyed Alamos and eventually got him in the corner, dropped him with an elbow and then pounded Alamos with elbows until he referee was forced to stop the bout. It was a very impressive performance from Thongchai coming up in weight.

Rittidet's stoppage of Newwangjan came via form of low kicks, and it didn't even take that many. Rittidet also came out fast, throwing a lot of punches. He managed to sneak in a few really hard low kicks so by the second round one vicious low kick put Newwangjan down and out.

Like all Wanchalong fights, Wanchalong vs. Yokpet was action packed and back and forth. Superlek and Choknamchai were also involved in a great fight, with Superlek being dropped in the fourth only to hurt Choknamchai with an elbow moments later.
