Written by Dave Walsh Tuesday, 03 September 2013 14:12 -

If you're like me, commentary matters to you when you watch fights. For GLORY, who will soon be making a big splash on American audiences by debuting on Spike TV. According to our old friend Fraser, that will begin with GLORY 10 Los Angeles, which is good news indeed, but the question of commentary team is still a big one for fans. While Stephen Quadros has been a mainstay for GLORY, his broadcast partner has shifted a few times now without there really being a good fit between a myriad of broadcast partners, but it looks like luck will change. Duke Roufus, the trainer from Roufus Sport who is responsible for such talents as new UFC Lightweight Champion Anthony Pettis and a staggering amount of other top level talent will be providing the color commentary when GLORY makes their Spike TV debut.

I have a new job!!! I will be the color commentator for @GLORY_WS on @SpikeTV I'm so excited to help showcase Elite #Kickboxing in the USA!

— Duke Roufus (@dukeroufus) September 2, 2013

So, if you are in the area and haven't gotten your tickets already, you should probably consider doing so, and if you'll be at home watching it on Spike TV, you'll be glad to have a knowledgeable team in control of the broadcast. The full card can be viewed here.